* The validity of the elections held in Allegheny, Fayette, Washington, and Westmoreland counties was challenged on the grounds that the counties had been in a "state of insurrection" at the time of the election and the seats were declared vacant on 9 January 1795. New elections were held, in which all eleven representatives were returned to office, the returns from Fayette and Allegheny being validated on 14 February, from Washington on 16 February, and from Westmoreland on 18 February.
